The present work was carried out between September 1999 and March 2002 in the working group of Prof. Dr. J. Hoppe at the Department of Physiological Chemistry II of the Theodor-Boveri Institute of the University Würzburg. It was supported by Deutsche Forschung Gemeinschaft. I would like to thank all those who worked together with me, who supported me and who were responsible for the nice working atmosphere.

I am very much thankful to Prof. Dr. J. Hoppe for the opportunity to carry out my Ph.D in his working group and for the interesting project of the thesis, the lots of helpful discussions and the invaluable guidance that he gave to me during my study. I especially thank to him for his kindness and patients .

I particularly wish to thank Prof. Dr. G. Krohne (Department of Electron Microscopy) for being the second referee of this work and representing this work in front of the Faculty of Biology.

I would like to thank much to Dr. Rolf Schäfer for introducing me the project and some of the techniques that I've used, for his helpful discussions, for his kindness and friendship.

My special thanks are for Dr. Ulrike Kagerhuber for introducing me some of the techniques, for her guidance, for her support and friendship during my stay in Würzburg.

I would like to say many thanks to Dr. Viviane Hoppe for all her helps during my study.

I would like to thank to Andre Kutschke and Barbara Bayer for their excellent technical helps.

I would like to thank also Dr. Monika May for her helpful suggestions on summary and its translation into German.

I would like to thank also Ms. Sabine Ebeling for her helps at the beginning of my stay in Würzburg.

I am very much thankful to my family for their support and courage during all my study.

I especially thank for the friendly and nicely working atmosphere in the lab to Dr. Rolf Schäfer, Dr. Ulrike Kagerhuber, Dr. Viviane Hoppe, Mr. Andre Kutschke and Mrs. Barbara Bayer.

I would like to adress also my thanks to all other friends who have not been mentioned here by names, but who helped me during my thesis work and who gave me moral support and courage during my foreign stage.
